Light lunch to follow

For many students with complex social, emotional and behavioral challenges, school is a respite and a constant in an otherwise tumultuous life.

- ✓ What can educators do to better support students who may be living in at-risk settings, such as foster care, group homes, highly mobile families, extended family or on their own?
- ✓ How can educators better support students as they transition from in-patient treatment programs or the justice system, back to school?

In this three-hour program, hear from leaders who work with these students everyday about the types of supports and services that make a difference in the lives of young people, help prevent crisis situations, and that allow them to make academic gains.
